However, in the absence of a 68W, the level of medical training available to the individual soldiers is quite low, basically equivalent to a civilian first aid course, and focuses on giving basic aid to a single other soldier the buddy aid principle until a medic arrives. The idea is to ensure that in the absence of a combat medic, the CLS will be able to replicate some though not all of the fullfledged medics ALS techniques for their squad until the patients can be evacuated to definitive care i.e. an aid station or field hospital or a medic arrives to take over. It functionally extends the soldiers medical duties from just his or her battle buddy to his or her entire squad, and gives him or her the extra training to do it successfully. In times when there is many casualties and few medics and presuming the soldier can be spared, the CLS can also serve as a competent assistant at an aid station. Likewise, CLSs are not permitted to carry or dispense any medication aside from the acetaminophen, meloxicam and moxifloxacin pills carried in every soldiers Combat Pill Pack without specific orders from their Battalion Surgeon. The tasks you will now learn are tasks normally performed by the 91B combat medic. The most important task you will learn is to initiate an intravenous infusion.

<http://impressionmexico.com/images/buggy-champ-manual.pdf>

Initiating an intravenous infusion will help to control shock caused by blood loss, severe burns, or severe heat injury. This will create a problem for the Army Medical Department as well as the rest of the Army. The name given to this nonmedical provider of farforward emergency care is the combat lifesaver. You are to provide emergency care as a secondary mission when your primary mission allows. You may also be asked to assist the combat medic in providing care and preparing casualties for evacuation when you have no combat duties to perform. The aid bag weighs a little over nine pounds and takes up about 0.44 cubic feet. The aid bag consists of the following items Administered for headache, common cold, and minor pain. Used to secure the I.V. catheter and tubing to the casualty's arm. Used to keep the airway of an unconscious casualty open. Used to administer additional antidote to nerve agent casualties. Used to protect minor wounds. While the combat lifesaver does not bandage sprains, this bandage can be useful as a reinforcement bandage and as padding for a splint. Used to secure splints and used as tourniquet bands, slings, and swathes. The case has three zippered compartments for storing supplies and a shoulder strap. Used in administering intravenous infusion. Used to alleviate convulsions in nerve agent casualties. Used to control bleeding and protect wounds. Used when initiating I.V.s for the protection of both casualty and combat lifesaver. Connects the I.V. bag to the needle and catheter unit. The clamp controls the rate at which the fluid flows from the bag. Used to cleanse skin, especially before performing the I.V. puncture. Used to protect minor wounds from infection. Used to cut the casualty's clothing to expose wounds, cut muslin bandages into triangular bandages, and cut tape. Used as a constricting band when performing the I.V. task. This lesson is tested in the written multiplechoice examination.

Groups Discussions Quotes Ask the Author It is through this concerted effort of providing ongoing, meaningful training that has enabled us to reduce the number of battlefield fatalities to a level unparalleled in our nation's history. The course you will be attending will certify you as a trainer. Only experienced and highly skilled 8404 Corpsmen should apply for attendance. A TCCC test will be administered at the beginning of class on day one. You must pass this written test with an 80% or above to remain in training. The test is based upon the most recently approved CoTCCC developed TCCC Guidelines. In lieu of the test, incoming students have the option of taking the Expeditionary Medicine web based training NM10EMTCCC2.0, found on NKO. Students will need to provide a certificate that shows passing of the course when checking into class. You will not be taught any medical skills in this course as most of the class will concentrate on teaching you to provide quality instruction. You will be required to perform multiple oral presentations, including teach backs of medical topics. This is to provide you with the knowledge, skills and abilities, and ultimately the confidence needed to effectively deliver the material. One of the topics covered will be the Combat Lifesaver Program. Although this concept has been in the operating forces for some time, it was formalized in 2006 and the curriculum will be available to you on a disc we provide upon completion of the course.

Since the principles of Tactical Combat Casualty Care are being practiced now in every facet of military medical care, this course will provide a brief review of the three phases of care. The updates covered in the most recent Committee on Tactical Combat Casualty Care CoTCCC meeting will be covered and you will be responsible for providing instruction on this topic to all Corpsmen in your unit. This represents the most formalized sustainment training for Hospital Corpsmen in recent memory. During this time of conflict, these courses are more relevant than ever. Quality instruction leads directly to more men and women surviving combat injuries. We look forward to seeing you on the first day of training!
